

New one-story: open plan at $12,490

Design for Mass Production

A significant movement that sparked a transition in America was the Levittown movement of 1947. The mass production of houses can be dated back to 1947 when William Levitt produced the Levitt-town housing developments.

By building such communities of secluded areas one may ask if this has helped America become a more developed nation or if it has aided in our segregation among each other living in various but similar communities.