

Dancegraphy is a decomposition and reconstruction of Japanese house dancer Hiro's dance moves. The diagram reveals spatial patterns and structures of different moves in house dance choreography. One gesture is captured every two seconds, and every six gestures compose a move. By overlapping these gestures, the shape of a move can be seen.

The 2D diagram was transformed into a 3D structure and output as a plaster tile.

