

Upon arriving to Chicago, one of the first visual impressions a person experiences, is the realization that the buildings are truly larger than life. Rising off of Lake Michigan the city's skyline is something to behold. Some of these buildings, like the Willis Tower, formerly the Sears Tower, ascend to almost 1800 feet towards the sky. With seven buildings soaring over 1000 feet and countless others that are tall, one might not realize that as beautiful and magnificent these buildings are, there is also another aspect of the city that is even more grand, the public art.

With this Art Guide the focus is on the perspective of the viewer, as if he or she, is at the bottom of the artwork gazing skyward. Enjoy the amazing artwork and remember while you're in the Windy City to always keep your eye to the sky!

Gregory G. Knight, Deputy Commissioner/Visual Arts
Department of Cultural Affairs

