As the head man of the Department of Sculpture the Central Academy of Fine Arts, Sui Jianguo emerged as one of the most influential leading Chinese experimental artists in the early 1990's. His sculptures typically respond to China's social and political transformation, and help reflect on cultural clashes in the process of globalization. With "Made in China" engraved on their chests, his larger than life toy dinosaurs reference the cheap, mass - produced goods that have become a strong foundation of the booming Chinese export economy prowess as well as a stereotypical image of China in the west.
