INTERVIEW WITH GREEN DAY: WHAT'S UP?

*THIS WAS AN INTERVIEW BY GREEN DAY IN FEBRUARY 4, 2010.
THEY TALKED ABOUT WHAT ROCK 'N' ROLL HAS TAUGHT THEM.*

You need a good producer for when you feel like you're losing it in the studio

Billie Joe Armstrong (vocals/guitar): When things were getting a little difficult during the recording of '21st Century Breakdown', Butch [Vig] helped us a lot. He brought this great sense of calm, but was totally enthusiastic at the same time. Half the job of a producer is to be an adviser and say, 'Look, I know you've heard this song 13,000 times in a row but it's still as good as it was the first time you heard it'. There were times when we definitely needed that.

Tré Cool (drums): Butch also wears a cape around the studio and has a podium. He'd call us in sometimes and do his rants – sometimes they'll be in English or sometimes they'll be in some kind of broken Scandinavian language. I can't reveal too much about his working methods. It's sort of like the Freemasons...

Mums are full of great advice...

Mike Dirnt (bass): I can't imagine not being in Green Day. Everything in my life is based around this music and this band. Fortunately, I'm in a position where what I do best is what I do for a living. My mom always said, 'Whatever you do, do it to the best of your ability and, if you're lucky, it'll be what you're good at'. She's a clever lady. One thing that both me and Billie can relate to is what happens if you are brought up in a house full of women. It opens your eyes real quick and shows you a sense of respect for the world.

...And dads can be pretty helpful too.

Cool: I must have been a nightmare kid. Me and my dad got a lot closer when I moved out at 17 – we started bonding big-time but before that I think he thought of me as the rug-rat. He was a helicopter pilot in Vietnam. I definitely looked up to him but I was kind of scared too – y'know, knowing that he could kill me at any second. But he wasn't authoritarian, he was the kind that would party with you.

He taught me a lot too, about physics, heavy weaponry, mass-produced feminine-hygiene products. It's sad to see him now, though, in that state he's in. He wears his army helmet and runs around in his underwear. He still thinks the war is on, and if he hears a helicopter he runs for the bushes. He's a little quirky. (Continued next page.....)
