THIS REVOLUTION WAS FOUGHT WITH LITTLE UMBRELLAS AND TINY PLASTIC SWORDS.

The Smirnoff name might have survived the Russian Revolution, but it almost didn't survive the American palate. When Smirnoff vodka was first made on U.S. soil in the 1930s, Americans drank three things: beer, whiskey, and beer. That was until one intrepid bartender mixed Smirnoff with ginger beer and called it a Moscow Mule. Soon, bartenders everywhere were inventing all kinds of vodka concoctions. It was a true cocktail revolution, one that would transform Smirnoff from being the drink nobody drank to one of the most popular spirits in the world. But whatever you mix No. 21 with, one thing will never change – its extraordinary purity.

Clearly Original. Clearly
