

Discover The Badlands

The Badlands don't call out to motorists. They don't loom on the horizon for miles.

They appear suddenly and stunningly, surprising the traveler who isn't prepared for such sweeping, stark beauty that comes seemingly out of nowhere.

In the summer, the Badlands region is hot and dusty with little shade and even less drinkable water. Although the automobile and smooth, paved roads have lessened the Badlands' impact on traveling, the region can still seem inhospitable.

Nonetheless, there are few places so beautiful.

Badlands National Park, a 244,000-acre expanse, annually hosts about 1 million visitors, most of whom enjoy the scenic drive through the park on the Badlands Loop. This loop – technically, it's Highway 240, stretching from I-90 near Kadoka to another point on I-90 at Wall – offers an easy, hour-long tour of the Badlands, if no stops are figured in.
