

Discover White Lake

White Lake is a vibrant community located somewhere between 21st century technoscape and the American Old West! White Lake's quality educational system and eco-friendly industries generate opportunities in the small city of friendly people and family values.

There is a memorial plaza, located on main street, that brings generations of White Lake history into focus. Etched markers honoring early pioneers, the landing of the Explorer II balloon and Armed Forces veterans make the plaza a place of reflection and education.

As national emphasis shifts to renewable and eco-friendly sources of energy, electric power generation from the wind has become an effective alternative to fossil fuel plants. Scientific studies have shown one of the windiest spots in South Dakota is found 12 miles north of White Lake, on the high rolling prairie of Patten Hills in far northwestern Aurora County.

Easily visible from I-90, the wind turbines of PrairieWinds SD1 are interconnected by access roads for site maintenance. Skilled techs are responsible for keeping the facility running at peak performance 365 days per year.

About 10 miles south of White Lake is the landing site of the 1935 stratosphere balloon. Launched from a deep canyon in the Black Hills, the balloon ascended to a height of 72,395 feet, which was a record at the time. The three brave men who went along for the ride were the first to view the curvature of the earth.
