

Wheras Robin Rongley and Bernie Campbell are here on the beach in Avalon, New Jersey this day, Saturday, September 18, 1999 to celebrate their marriage. In the presence of family and friends we ask God for his divine blessing of our loving commitment to each other, to live a life time together as husband and wife.

We, Robin and Bernie are now bringing together the best parts of our individuality, uniting spirit, talent and experience to create something better than either of us alone can offer. We pledge to each other to work hard to maintain this union. We vow to keep sacred the belief that marriage depends on the constant renewal of choices and promises made today. No matter what the cost, we vow to always believe in one another, always expect the best of one another and above all else, always stand our ground in defending one another. Life together will sometimes be playful and effortless, sometimes frustrating and difficult. In short, where we were two individuals we are now a family.

Standing before God, family and friends we take one another as husband and wife, promising to love, and cherish one another in sickness and in health, in harmony and in life's trials, in sorrow and in joy, for as long as we both shall live.

The wedding rings exchanged are the outward sign of an inward bond, which unites two people in love. It is an unbroken band with no beginning and no end. These rings serve, from this moment on, as a daily reminder of the permanence of our love and the solidity of a new life together.

Love is nurturing. Love is listening.

Love lightens burdens because you divide them.

Love intensifies joys because you share them.

Love encourages you to reach out and involve yourselves with life in ways you may not have risked alone.

Love is patient and kind. Love is never jealous, selfish, or rude. Love will never demand its own way.

We, Robin Rongley and Bernie Campbell having made these vows of marriage, set fourth our hands:

We as family and friends give caring witness here today to this union of two individuals who choose to commit to a life together. Our responsibility as their friends and witnesses is to provide Robin and Bernie as a couple, with love, support, and approval. In addition, we hope that you will always remember the delight that you have discovered in each other's company, that you accept the discoveries and treasures of growing old together, and that you will live joyously, laugh freely and support your marriage throughout the triumphs and trials to come.

As further confirmation we the friends and family set fourth our hands:
