

imitation is the sincerest form of flattery

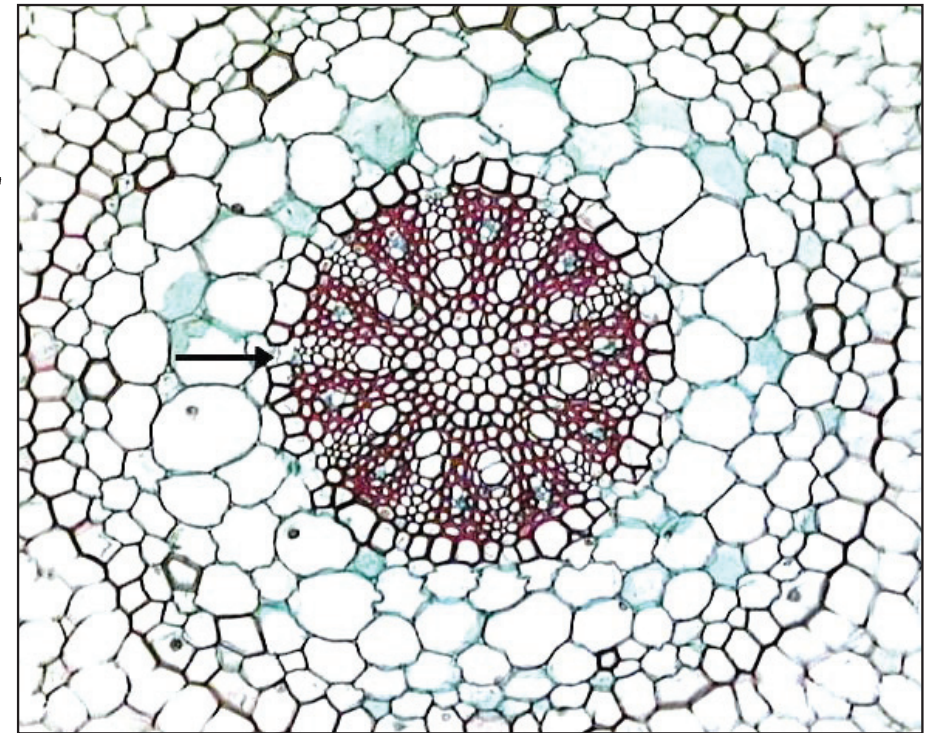

+ orchids
+ philodendron

+ bromeliads

+ trunk-born fruit

+ mangrove trees

NATURAL OCCURRENCES OF AERIAL WATER ABSORPTION

There are repeating occurrences in nature of plants adapting their root structures to accommodate for an over abundance of water or severe dehydration. This is accomplished through aerial root structures pulling moisture from the air. This ability is possible through a specific cell structure adaptation.