PLATINUM SPONSORS

Today, hundreds of government organizations around the globe, at every level of government, rely on open source and Linux to serve their constituents. More and more federal agencies are turning to Red Hat and the Red Hat Open Source Architecture as a Federal Enterprise Architecture (FEA) compliant solution that serves the basis for advancing to the next level of e-government. Through this component-based architecture, Red Hat OSA optimizes open standards-based systems integration, allows for services consolidation, and extracts higher performance without increasing budget requirements.

GOLD SPONSORS

HP is the leading provider of Linux IT solutions that enable U.S. government agencies to achieve mission success and adapt to ongoing change. HP, on June 16, 2005, announced that it has set an industry-first milestone by shipping more than 1 million Linux servers to customers since 1998, 45 percent more than any other major hardware vendor. (More information about HP's Government Solutions is available at www.hp.com/go/federal and www.hp.com/go/linux)

For over 35 years, Intel Corporation has supplied the computing and communications industries with platforms, components, and software that are the "ingredients" in computers, servers, and networking and communications products. These products are used by industry members to create advanced computing and communications systems in today's worldwide digital economy.

IBM Global Government is dedicated to providing innovative thinking to help solve government's greatest challenges. With a broad portfolio of offerings, capabilities, services, and products, IBM brings best practices, extensive industry expertise, and a long list of successful client engagements. IBM helps governments around the world, and at all levels, improve operational efficiencies in delivering critical services, transform business processes, and collaborate across departments-with government agencies and other external entities--in a highly safe and secure environment.
