

Birmingham Chess Set

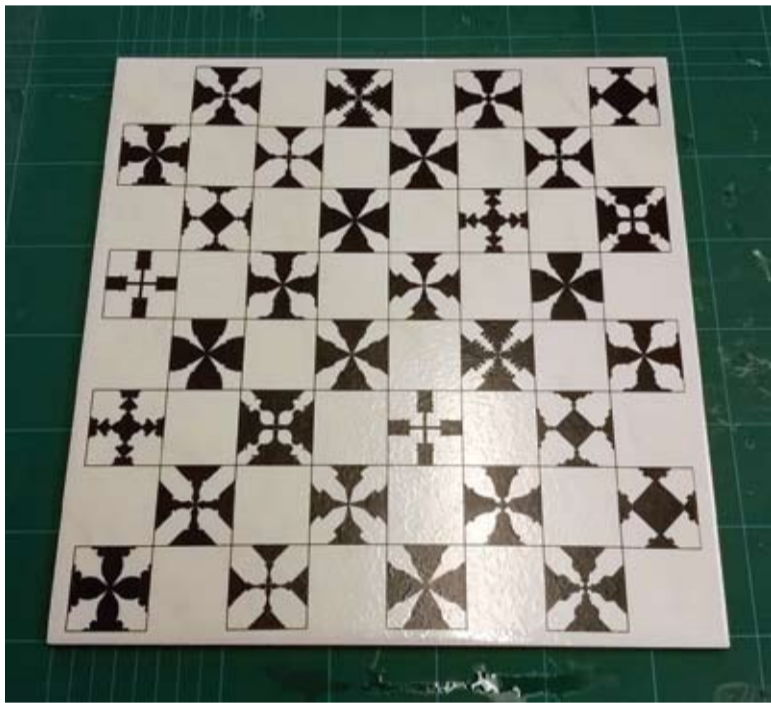

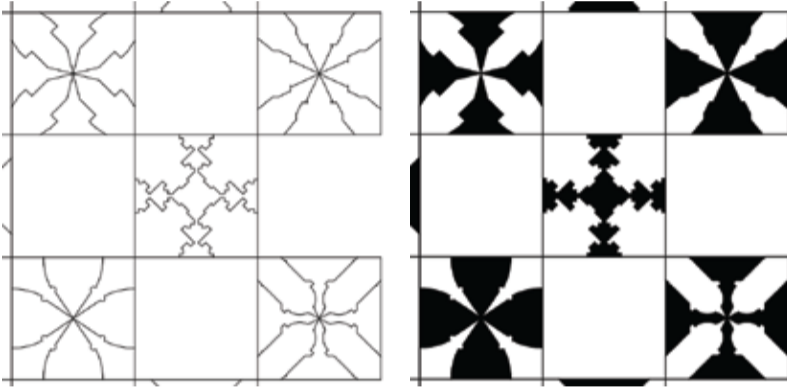

Final Stages & Chess Board Development.

Date: 03/05/2014

Board Development:

Taking the tops of each building, and using the silhouettes to represent the black squares on the board.
Minimal and yet detailed.

A redish colour like burgundy would be a great way to represent the red brick buildings and institutes that make up the chess set.

Situation: Pieces after bisque firing. Now they will be glazed a gloss white and red, then fired a second time at a much higher temperature.

Final Outcome: Both a practical and ornate piece that would catch the attention on any coffee table.
A unique product designed for the high end tourist and gift market.
