

About me.

Originating from an underlying desire to help people, I have been subconsciously improving my problem-solving skills from an early age. Through my studies I have developed a passion for observing how people react to design in many forms. My work has an emphasis on usability, and through my experience with hospitals I have naturally gravitated towards design for disability. I honestly believe that Product Design can make real a difference to people's quality of life, and I hope that one day the gap between design for disability and for the mainstream will be bridged. Music and photography also play an important role in my life.
