Tighty Whities

A pair of man's drawers made of pink silk stockinette, circa 1830. The garment is shown against a dark background, highlighting its light color and the gathered waistband. The legs are long and taper towards the ankles, which are finished with small elasticated cuffs. The fabric has a subtle sheen and some visible creasing.

The 1930s brought about the invention of what we would consider modern underwear. The jockey, the boxer, and a plethora of designs long since discarded came about then. The greatest innovation? Elastic
