Johnny Rockets + MB Creamery = PARTY TIME

By Teri Roughen

I often think about how kids parties have changed since I was a child. Recently, they've seemingly become big, extravagant, circus-like events that may be more for the parents than the children. Back in the day birthdays seemed just as special, but just a little more intimate. Our birthday parties consisted of our moms baking a simple cake, a few store bought invitations were handed out, our friends were invited over to sit in the floor of our living rooms and play Pin the Tail on the Donkey (maybe some Musical Chairs), we'd eat cake, open a few gifts and that was that.

With life seemingly so busy these days especially for those with children, I was thinking about how one could throw a kids' party in the simplest yet fun way without going completely over the top. Johnny

Rockets is the perfect setting to do just that. So, we gathered a few party favors from the local party store and teamed up with The Creamery to add some sweetness, then let Johnny Rockets do the rest! The kids had fun, they were fed and happy, it was celebratory but still low key, and a definite success!
