

Admittedly, we were puzzled when we saw this headline too. Sure, she has, but what has that got to do with the price of haute couture? It turns out this is the headline of an Ask Hadley column from May. "Having just read Tina Fey's book, I was interested in her suggestion that you should never wear what designers tell you to wear, but what they wear themselves. Is that true?" asked Sara from New York.

In at number two, it's another chart-topper from Ms Freeman. In her Ask Hadley from April, Cecilia Rivers asked: "Shouldn't we just embrace the visible panty line and be done with it? The 70s seem to be bang on trend and that's what ladies used to sport then." "Cecilia, your devotion to the cause is impressive, if misguidedly fanatical," began Hadley, before ruling out the return of VPL with the words: "No, no, no, no". And lo, VPL did not become a hot trend for 2011. Hadley is nothing if not precise."
