Everyone who knows about my quest is very supportive of it, especially my in-laws. They all definitely approve of my quest, because they all want me to be able to learn to speak and understand their language. My in-laws are always happy when I say something to them in their language or when I am able to understand something they say, because it helps me to engage in conversations with them. The biggest reason my in-laws want me to learn the Nepali language is so that I will be able to speak to those family members that cannot speak English. They say it would really make them feel good if they are able to speak with me and to see that I take interest in their language and culture. They all, including my husband, try to teach me as much as possible. Even other Nepali people who are friends or acquaintances of the family try to help me to learn a little bit of their language. They are all very supportive and always tell me that I am capable of learning the Nepali language pretty fast, especially since I am around the language all the time. Even my side of the family takes a little bit interest in the Nepali language. Sometimes I will post a status on Facebook in Nepali and they will respond back trying to figure out what I am saying. I hope that my constant exposure to this language will help me to learn it very quickly so that I can interact with Nepali friends and family more easily. So far I am making progress.
