

Journal 5

So far I am feeling really good about my quest. Everything is going according to plan, and I seem to be progressing at a pretty good speed. I am also really enjoying the whole process of learning the Nepali language. At first, I expected that taking this quest would be a pretty big hassle. I mean, there is definitely nothing easy about trying to learn a different language, and I figured that it would require a lot of my time to learn it. However, because of the methods that I have come up with for learning Nepali, I have managed to learn a lot in just a small amount of time. I also have an interest in my quest, because I have always wanted to be able to speak and understand another language. It has always amazed me whenever I would hear people speaking so many different languages so fluently. I could never understand how anyone could remember so many different ways of speaking, and to do it without a second thought. In my opinion, the more languages you know how to speak, the more open the world is to you. It would enable you to speak to so many different kinds of people. That is just so fascinating to me. Although I don't expect to learn a lot of languages, I do expect to learn Nepali, because it will be very beneficial to both my husband's family and to me. Being able to speak to my in-laws in their language would really be a great achievement.