A school that—like her—is perpetually learning.

At Breck, every day brings new opportunities to reimagine, reinvent, and reanimate learning—both your child's, and our school's.

Redefining whole-child education

Breck teachers start by discovering your child's unique interests and abilities. Then they tailor lessons to stretch different aspects of his mind. Mandarin class calls on him to combine linguistics with visual artistry. A chapel discussion asks him to think beyond what he can see. He's in the process of becoming more than well rounded; he's beginning to learn how he learns and see his capabilities in a new light.

Your child:
perpetually curious.

What kind of school can engage every facet of her developing mind?

Reemphasizing character

At Breck, your child's intellect and character develop symbiotically. During Morning Meeting, she discusses topics like respect and empathy through our nationally recognized C.A.R.E. curriculum. Then she applies those concepts throughout her day, week, and year—understanding the impact she can have on her classmates and teachers, that even her smallest actions matter, and how caring for others can be more enriching than acting out of self-interest.

Reconnecting on our campus home

All fourteen years of his Breck education unfold on our single campus. As a first grader, he attends chapel and celebrates milestones with his senior buddy. As a third and fourth grader, he "biddies" in the cafeteria, serving lunch and cleaning up for his younger peers. More than a school, Breck feels and behaves like a family. For your child, that means a 1300-person support network, always ready to cheer his achievements and help him through challenges.

At Breck, your child learns every day that thinking and problem-solving, listening and leading, and creating and collaborating are all lifelong processes, all constantly being reinvented, and all starting right here, right now.
