

D-town Hooligan is a collection of passionate artists from Dallas who push to expose art in the city. This group wants to show that art comes in every form and merges to create the urban culture that we know and love.

How did this project start?

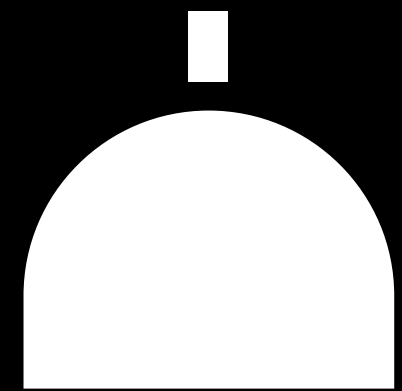

Steven: Johnny and I got together and started talking about how to get people to notice us.

Johnny: We came together because it's a growing city and the art scene is very weak. I surround myself with a bunch of creatives and if we just push for something together, we can have something really dope in Dallas. If I hit up a lot of shows, I feel like I could raise the bar...for artists.

Carlos: The art scene in Dallas is growing. We would like to be the major leaders along with other art groups around here to help Dallas grow as an art city.

What makes you guys different?

Johnny: What really makes us different is that we're not your typical artists who like to please the crowd. We do our own style in our own way. We like to be people who step out of the box and create things that haven't been created before.
