

THE CUTTING EDGE

KERTI PAHK

ESTONIAN SEAMSTRESS AT WORK

Ah it's finally Sunday, the day of sleep and rest and all that fun jazz.. well for other people at least.

I'm about to finish my morning coffee and head back to school. Because whether I like it or not it seems like the end of spring semester is about to rear it's ugly head with all the glorious exams and evaluations.

And as usual I have tons and tons of work ahead of me. But to prove myself that I can learn from my mistakes I've decided to take it easy this time.

Being a bit of an over-achiever by nature I tend to over work and think and worry.

And just to spare myself from the usual horror that comes with midterms, I've decided to put all my creative energy into projects that I actually find inspiring and just kick back and enjoy the work process, rather than just worry about the outcome.

Besides there is no better feeling in the world than to see your tiny pod of an idea or a sketch on a paper grow into an actual thing.

So here's a selection of photographs I've taken over the past few weeks.

I've spent most of my time at school and been quite the regular at our beloved fabric store. They must think I'm dressing an army. Well, close enough.

But I'm going to let you enjoy the pictures now, I hope you like the spring inspired collection of coats I'm constructing.

- Kerti Pahk

