PARADISE LOST

Aruba's postcard appeal comes under fire

BY JOSEPH KISSEL

'I would have sent a girl to London,' said Robert Collignon, a local commercial photographer. 'But not to Aruba.'

Famous for its strategic location south of the Caribbean's 'hurricane belt,' the island of Aruba is grappling with a storm of unwanted publicity after last month's disappearance of Natalee Holloway...

ON THE EDGE: The author teeters precariously during a round of heavy drinking at CarlosN' Charlie's, similar to the one Natalee Holloway visited before she disappeared in Aruba.

FIRE BELOW: Guests at CarlosN' Charlie's indulge in the kind of inhibition-stripping drinking that's been a part of bacchanalias for all time.

Life ends at CarlosN' Charlie's

I'll say it again. At CarlosN' Charlie's, life ends. The kind of life bound by inhibitions and the pulsing beat of society's usual standard of debauchery.

JOSEPH KISSEL

While not quite ancient Rome or even Neverland, a definite how-low-can-you-go? set of rules apply there. Hooray for Hollywood moral values!

ON DECK: Cruise ships provide a steady stream of clients to drinking establishments like CarlosN' Charlie's.
