

FROM THE ECHO

CYNDI HARVELL

"...weaves a sweet guitar melody that's almost as sexy as her voice." - San Francisco Chronicle

Hailing from a small town in Georgia, singer-songwriter Cyndi Harvell has become a voice to be reckoned with in her few short years of living and performing in California's Bay Area. With her first album, "The Night Turned to Song," Harvell toured the West Coast, received significant airplay on Americana stations across the globe and was a featured artist on Bay Area radio station KFOG's Local Scene Compilation album. She also landed several key gigs: a spot in San Francisco's Hardly Strictly Bluegrass Festival, the Gilroy Garlic Festival, and club shows at the Fillmore, Slim's, and Cafe Du Nord, among others.

Harvell's band creates a unique sound anchored by the brilliance of guitarist John Howland, who primarily plays weissenborn-style lap steel a la Ben Harper. The charming southern lilt in Harvell's voice draws you in to her world and persuades you to look for the mystery within. The song style ranges from moody, dub-esque, acoustic to upbeat catchy pop. Not unlike songwriters in the vein of Willie Nelson or Emmylou Harris, Harvell has a knack for subtle genre shifts, while always radiating that classic American flavor.

The new album "From the Echo" is due out on October 12. It's about escape. Falling. Rising. Soaring. The basic human desire to constantly change and evolve into something better. And the recipe is simple. Pure songs aching with honesty. A super talented band adding shine while allowing the songs to breathe. Hooks and melodies to sink your teeth into. And a voice like the creamy center of a tootsie pop. Yum.
