Life in the bubble

The world has changed since the NBA stopped on March 11. For 22 franchises, however, there is a goal that remains in place — a championship. But with the return of games comes a new dynamic — the bubble — the quarantined environment at the Wide World of Sports Complex in Orlando for players, coaches, support staff and media members. Here’s a look at what it takes to keep it clean and protected from coronavirus. Clockwise, from top left: Signs lead to an NBA COVID-19 testing site in Orlando where testing inside the NBA bubble occurs several times a week. Disinfectant spray sits near television cameras inside a basketball arena. A worker cleans the backboard following a game between the Nets and the Magic on Friday. A COVID-19 warning is posted outside basketball arenas at ESPN Wide World of Sports Complex. Hand sanitizer is posted in a staff work area. A security guard wearing a face mask stands along a concourse.
